There are 2 switches, a side mounted system wide power switch and top mount momentary power switch. The side switch, when in the off position, completely powers off the remote. When in the on position the remote is still technically off, as you have to use the top momentary switch to turn the remote on and off.

Price is not really the issue, you dont see too many high power rated, low KV, RC motors advertised, and we all know you would not expect to get anything close to 25kW out of this in a vehicle situation, so the question is, for a solid 10kW output, direct drive, mid mount Ebike,.. how might this stack up against ..
