The other thing we noticed is that he used a single point and used the workpiece as a ground return. Most spot welders use two points near each other or on each side of the workpiece. The current from the capacitor is probably just absorbed by the relatively large piece of metal.

ADP9 is a 900 Joule capacitive energy storage welding power supply. Its unique double pulse welding method can effectively solve the resistance welding problem of most precision hardware workpieces, set and record 10 groups of welding procedures, and has a special energy locking function to ensure that the welding quality will not decline due to the fluctuation of the power ...

This spot welder, unlike many available DIY projects, doesn't need a microcontroller to work: the welding pulse is triggered using relay module and a timing capacitor. Welding current is switched with an old recycled industrial thyristor module. Pulse energy can be adjusted with a potentiometer, which changes the voltage of capacitor bank.

Of course It certainly is possible to use supercapacitors in a spot welder, as I saw some existing designs, but they usually have precise pulse control with MOSFETs and microcontrollers, and these supercaps are treated in similar way as batteries. Regular electrolytic capacitors are easier to use without sophisticated pulse control system.

Most spot welders use two points near each other or on each side of the workpiece. The current from the capacitor is probably just absorbed by the relatively large piece of metal. The second video below from [American Tech] shows a 500F capacitor doing spot welding with little more than two wires and it seems to work.
