The traditional flower that sprinkled water came before modern water guns. Air pressure water guns were invented in 1977, when one of the first air pressure water guns, the Cosmic Liquidator, opened the road for today's best-pressurized water gun list. Water guns have evolved from there, with the Super Soaker being invented in 1991.

Students use their understanding of projectile physics and fluid dynamics to find the water pressure in water guns. By measuring the range of the water jets, they are able to calculate the theoretical pressure. Students create graphs to analyze how the predicted pressure relates to the number of times they pump the water gun before shooting.
