All the fun that comes out of Lethal Company is from playing with friends with mics. It's always funny to walk around a corner to hear your friend's muffled screams with something on their head. Or whispering together in a corner, coming up with a half-baked plan that literally blows up in your face the second you attempt it.

I know lots on Lethal Company prioritize multiplayer, but sometimes it's fun to be on your own and just try to be good at a game. Though maybe not super obvious, Lethal Company has a decent skill ceiling. But I agree, general balancing in both solo and multiplayer would do wonders, I think. Thanks for your input!

Hey. Jester can reset to the normal box mode if all of your team is outside the facility for 5+ seconds (estimated). The best tactic would be just taking all the loot out and dragging it to the ship once you encounter the box and it starts playing, usually enough time passes for the jester to calm down and allow you to loot a bit more.
